Snapping turtles may seem to have little to do with courage, perseverance, and industry, but the thrilling way in which Tom, Bill, and Cliff found in them incentive to all these things, and pleasure and profit besides, makes this a red-blooded, outdoor story of enterprising American boys who honestly earn their good times.

Their first sale of snapping turtles enables the boys to build a boat and explore a mysterious wooded swamp, trackless and dangerous, wherein they meet with adventures as strange as are to be found in the world's most out - of - the - way places. Thrilling voyages of discovery, buried treasures, exciting encounters with unknown enemies and queer animals, make Hidden Island a book no boy or girl can lay down until the last page is read.

Mr. Rutherford's friendly conversational style makes the reader intimately acquainted with the three boys, and an eager and sympathetic partner in all their trials and triumphs.

ANWORTH RUTHERFORD was born in Hastings, Nebraska, when that town was merely a frontier settlement. His literary career began at the age of sixteen, with a revised version of Swiss Family Robinson which did not include the restraining influence of the pious father and mother. His books for boys have been received with enthusiasm because of their clean, sparkling excitement and ingenuity of plot.

At the present time Rutherford lives on an abandoned mining claim high up in the mountains of Idaho, where the winter snows isolate him for several months in his cabin. At this time Rutherford finds plenty of time to continue his literary work when he isn't sawing wood to keep himself from freezing to death.
