ELECTRIC RAILWAYS SAW WOOD SEPT. 15th QUAKER CITY IN NORTHWEST Big Mill at Potlatch Put in Motion-Moved to Perfection

Almost 500 miles of electric rail lines have been laid in the Pacific Northwest, with the Portland, Oregon, system the longest. The Portland system has a total length of 147 miles, and the Seattle system has a total length of 110 miles. The Portland system was completed in 1905, and the Seattle system was completed in 1906. The electric railways in the Northwest have been a great success, and they have made it possible for the people of the Northwest to travel more easily and more cheaply than ever before. The electric railways have also made it possible for the people of the Northwest to live in more remote areas, and they have made it possible for the people of the Northwest to enjoy the benefits of modern civilization.
